

eduroam Policy

The University offers free access to the Internet (via JANET) to all visitors from eduroam connected institutions.

The University receives its internet service via JANET and is therefore committed to JANET's eduroam (UK) policy (<https://community.jisc.ac.uk/library/janet-services-documentation/eduroamuk-policy>). It is important that before you connect to eduroam at UCB you are fully aware of its contents and implications.

It should also be noted that the University reserves the right to block access to sites deemed illegal or inappropriate and will maintain a full access log of all activity on the network.

All users are required to abide by the University Internet Access Policy as follows:

The use of any IP address or modification to the network configuration other than that assigned by the University is prohibited.

The use of the network for illegal or unethical activities is prohibited which includes, but is not limited to: attempting denial of service attacks, degrading or restricting network access for others, exploiting security holes, circumventing security or in any way gaining unauthorised access to any computing resources.

Any action, whether intentional or unintentional, that affects the performance of the network may result in disconnection until the problem is rectified.

The receipt, transmission, or use of software, data, or other intellectual property must observe all copyright laws, license restrictions and policies. The University will fully comply with any investigations of violations and those responsible for such abuse will be held legally accountable.

Viewing or downloading of any unauthorised or unlicensed software, copyrighted items including photographs, text, music and video or pornographic and/or obscene material will lead to an immediate loss of access rights and will be reported directly to your host institution for further action to be taken.

The University reserves the right to monitor bandwidth usage and at to limit or prohibit excessive consumption at any time.

Network service may be intentionally interrupted from time to time for maintenance purposes. Unintentional interruptions may occur and the University will work to restore the service as quickly as possible.

The University is not responsible for any losses or damages caused by service interruptions or other failures to network equipment.

These policies will be strictly enforced and the University reserves the right to disconnect users at any time for any violation.